How increased global competition is reshaping tax priorities

National and international political coalitions are forming and reshaping after the many elections in 2024 and early 2025. New and established leaders alike are building relationships and learning to interact as they transition from electioneering to governing. Many governments are focusing on generating more revenue, both from economic growth and new sources, as they prioritize local interests and seek to control deficits. To collect that revenue, governments are intensifying enforcement, increasing transparency and using new tools. How governments align or diverge in these efforts will impact shared global goals and challenges.

These and other developments are addressed in the 2025 EY Tax Policy and Controversy Outlook, reflecting the perspectives of EY Tax professionals in 70 jurisdictions, gathered at the start of 2025. Detailed reports on the tax policy and controversy developments in each of the 70 jurisdictions are also included.
