Preparing for the rise of e-invoicing and the transformation of the tax audit landscape

The growth of e-invoicing and near real-time reporting is changing the game for tax functions.

Given the increasing pressure for more tax revenues, a growing number of tax authorities are using e-invoicing data as a way to audit and review taxpayers' positions in detail. Businesses should consider preparing for this growing scrutiny by rethinking their data systems, security and processes.

For more information on how e-invoicing and near real-time reporting are changing the game for tax functions, listen to the Tax Threads podcast, How the challenge of e-invoicing can transform your tax function. Host Tony Ganzer (Associate Director, Global Tax Brand, Marketing and Communications, Ernst & Young LLP) discusses with Deirdre Hogan (Partner, Tax and Law, Ernst & Young Business Advisors) and Chiu Ming Man (Partner, Ernst & Young LLP), if e-invoicing will bring real-time challenges or kickstart a tax transformation. Key highlights include: the case for transformation; tax functions transforming at the speed of change; and a look at the roadmap businesses can start to prepare for now.

Furthermore, use the EY Global E-invoicing Developments Tracker to help stay informed about the latest developments and empower your organization to adapt swiftly to the changing landscape of global tax compliance and reporting.
